Archive Issue—Dedicated to the Liberation of Bergen Belsen
It is with mixed feelings that I introduce this issue of "Zachor", the newsletter of the Vancouver Holocaust Centre Society. On the one hand I am pleased to be able to make a contribution, however small, to the Society's objective of Holocaust remembrance and education; on the other hand I am incensed by its necessity. And necessary it is, not only to help prevent such catastrophes from being repeated, but also to provide an antidote to the poison of the Holocaust deniers.

Today the remaining survivors and witnesses are our most telling educational resource, but eventually we will be left only with our archives. This is the reason for the existence of our Society and others like it, which will live on to combat the hate-mongers and to honour the memory of our six million innocent relatives murdered only because of their race. As for myself, I will never forget, neither will I forgive the perpetrators of this uniquely monstrous horror. Such forgiveness I leave to other generations, if they can, but I commend our children and our friends to the archives of our Society, so that they may be strengthened to oppose the outbreaks of racial intolerance which we see today and expect again.

We are indebted to Dr. Jacques Barth for his suggestion of "Zachor"—the Hebrew word for "remember"—as the new name of our publication.

I would appreciate hearing from members and supporters of the Society with their suggestions as to the format or content of Zachor.

We request testimonials or graphics from survivors and witnesses. We need articles from informed commentators. We can use volunteer artists and technicians to assist in the production process. We appreciate any help from supporters and benefactors.

What are archives and why have them? The reasons for building and maintaining archives are answered in archives are answered in our Editor's remarks. But the question remains for many, "What exactly are archives?" Archives are unpublished documentary records of organizations and individuals, generated in the course of their day to day activities and kept permanently for posterity. The essential functions of an archive, like the VHCS's, are to collect, preserve and make available its holdings. Strictly speaking, the VHCS collection is not an archive, but a "mixed collection" containing books and artifacts as well as the traditional papers, documents, maps and photographs.

The VHCS has been collecting for many years, reaching out beyond the survivor community for other records documenting the Holocaust years. A growing area in archival collecting is electronic and magnetic records. In this area, the VHCS has been in the forefront. Magnetic records includes sound (audio tape) and audiovisual (video tape) recordings. Since 1983, the Society has collected over 200 hours of eyewitness accounts of the events of the Holocaust. These records are carefully preserved in triplicate at several sites, including Yale University's Fortunoff Archive of Holocaust Testimonies.

Amongst the VHCS's many holdings are a large grouping of records relating to Bergen Belsen as a Death Camp and as a Displaced Persons Camp. Our holdings contain more than 30 separate items, three collections and eight testimonies. Following the summary of our Bergen Belsen records on page 4 is a history of Edward M. "Ted" Aplin by Stan Winfield, past president of the Jewish Historical Society of B.C. and Yukon. Ted Aplin became known as the "Angel of Belsen" for the good work he did there as a Royal Canadian Air Force Squadron Leader following liberation. The personal album Stan created to commemorate Aplin is one of our important holdings from Bergen Belsen.

Stan's gift to the collection includes two issues of "Unzer Stzyme" (Our Voice), a publication of the Jewish inmates of the Belsen Displaced Persons Camp. Also in our Bergen Belsen collection are many photographs taken by the liberating forces. The photographs came into our hands from many directions and in many ways, some as anonymous contributions. The horror and the truth are evident for all to see and consider: how did this event of such immense and tragic proportions happen in our century, an era that prided itself on its great civility and culture?

Preceeding Stan Winfield's story about humanitarian Ted Aplin are summaries of the accounts of Bergen Belsen survivors in our community. When you are through reading these articles, we hope those of you who have items from the Holocaust years will think about the great role they have to play in preserving history and educating our future generations. We hope you will strongly consider donating them to the Vancouver Holocaust Centre Society for Education and Remembrance's Holocaust Education Centre Archive, where they will be treated with dignity, preserved for posterity and made accessible for all to see the truths and lessons of the Nazi Holocaust.

To donate to the VHCS Collection, please call Rubin Pinsky, chairman, at 873-9842.

'Thank you to Surrey Museum Archives for the definition.

BERGEN-BELSEN: FROM DEATH TO LIFE

Summaries from the VHCS Audi-Visual Collection

Collated by Ronnie Tessler

The VHCS audio-visual collection of Holocaust testimonies contains more than 200 hours of eyewitness accounts of prewar Jewish life in Greater Europe, Holocaust histories and resettlement stories. Eight of these testimonies document experiences in Bergen-Belsen Death Camp, liberation by the British and the Displaced Persons Camp administered by them. Of these, six are from the perspective of inmates, forced into the camp by Nazi persecution. One is from a Jewish survivor who lived and worked in the camp after liberation.

Of the six survivors of Belsen, one was from Belgium, one from Poland, and four were taken exactly fifty years ago, in 1944, in the last horrific surge of Nazi mass deportations from Hungary. Co-incidentally, two were from the same town, although they did not survive under the same circumstances. All but one arrived in Bergen-Belsen from Auschwitz, but not one escaped either hard labour or other concentration camps. Five of the six were liberated April 15, 1945 by the British. (One was liberated from Dachau.) Each account contains many similarities; corroborations of historical data documented by others, Nazis and allies. Each story, however, is unique to the teller in its details.

In March, 1945, Mrs. F. was moved to Bergen Belsen from another camp. When Belsen was liberated, she succumbed to typhus and was very ill for six weeks. She later worked in the camp as a translator. In August 1946 she returned illegally to her home country. Mr. G. was forced to march to Bergen-Belsen after a train ride from Auschwitz on which many froze to death. He recalls the trains arriving in Belsen with Jews from Hungary. Mr. G. wished to return to his home after liberation but permission was not granted by the British administrators of the camp. He and eighteen other boys escaped by crawling under the wires. In March, H.G. was put on a train for Belsen after a forced march of 50km. They could hear the allied front advancing. Her four weeks in Bergen-Belsen were the worst part of her eleven months under Nazi domination since leaving Hungary. After liberation, she had a job in the camp, met and married her husband. In 1946, they tried to make their way illegally to Palestine. Returning to Belsen, her oldest daughter was born there in 1947. Mr. P., a partisan during the war, came to the camp in 1946, where he and his sister were reunited with their only living family member, a brother. His sister married in the camp.

From death to life; the irony of a hell that gave life to the survivors. A former hell that provided food, clothing, nursing and a sense of organization and purpose to life. A former hell that still had rules and regulations, but could yet generate enough life and love to produce marriages, children and the rebirth of culture. Its indelible memories survive in the words and photographs in our archive for all to see and learn from.

Ted Aplin—"The Angel of Belsen"

by Stanley H. Winfield

On April 15, 1994, forty-nine years will have passed since Bergen-Belsen was liberated by the British 11th Armoured Division. I arrived in Celle, approximately 20km. from the camp, on May 11, 1945, as a member of an RCAF group charged with the task of disarming the shattered Luftwaffe in the British zone of occupation. It was there that I had the honour of serving with the late Edward M. "Ted" Aplin, truly a "Righteous Gentile" who, in the ten months that followed, conducted a personal crusade to give the survivors some comfort, dignity and hope.

Soon after our arrival, we recognized that our official military duties had become meaningless. Our mission was to ensure that the Germans would have no ability to rearm. In fact, there was nothing left of the German Air Force in our area of operations. Despite army regulations prohibiting entry into Belsen, Ted obtained permission to do so in early June. He returned shaken and aghast at a regulation that forbade the survivors all contact with the outside world, except through official channels. Even though the army and the British Red Cross were providing minimal food and clothing (requisitioned from German communities in the area) to the survivors, there was never enough, nor was any thought given to their recreation. And worst of all, their futures remained in question. Most dreamed of going to Palestine, but this was very much against British policy. Just three months earlier, in March 1945, Britain had endorsed the creation of the anti-Zionist 'Arab League'. We Canadians were under the command of the British Army Of The Rhine, and for our Canadian senior personnel, mostly career officers, Belsen was a political hornet's nest.

An excellent and moving article about Ted entitled "The Angel of Belsen" appeared in the January, 1989 French edition of Readers' Digest, followed in November, 1990 by the English edition. I am proud to have been the source of much of the material that went into the piece, written by Robert "Bob" Collins. Bob described Ted as "a man of unshakable convictions, no matter the cost." How true! Within weeks of his first exposure to the inferno that was Belsen, we were enlisting the aid of our fellow Canadian and British servicemen, wherein their families and friends at home would send parcels containing food, clothing and other other necessities. These parcels were marked with a "B" by the sender. Our postal corporal would pull these parcels off the mail truck, and Ted and I would ferry them to the British Red Cross or the Jewish Relief unit in Belsen.

Such flagrant abuse of duty time and misuse of military vehicles to transport this "contraband" made our senior officers furious, but Ted was not to be deterred. He was angered at what he perceived to be a waste of taxpayers' money keeping so many men overseas on a futile task when they longed to be at home and getting on with their lives. He began stalking out of meetings, writing letters to friends in Canada, soliciting aid for Belsen survivors or going out to the camp while I did my best to cover for him - not always successfully.

We continued ferrying parcels to Belsen, all the while Ted collecting exercise books and pencils for education classes, taking children on picnics, and befriending the friendless. Ted collected Belsen inmates' art, which he wanted to send on a tour of England and North America. He sought the sponsorship of the Canadian High Commissioner in London but was turned down. However, he did succeed in mounting a small show in England with the help of a British Red Cross official, but never the grand tour he envisioned.

During all this time Ted was fighting a bitter and recriminatory battle with his superior officers, facing demotion, or worse, in his view, "to be sent home." But his integrity and determination won out. Ted sought redress through the RCAF Overseas Headquarters in London, with the result that the proceedings against him were struck out. Our working relationship, however, was completely severed. I was transferred to a squadron in Oldenberg, and although Ted remained in the Celle Headquarters, a new job was created for him: raising the troops' flagging morale. He tackled the job with characteristic vigour, inaugurating study courses, lectures, hobby groups and debates. But, if our senior officers thought it would divert him from his obsession, they were wrong. He worked ceaselessly to locate the relatives of survivors in other parts of the world. To this day, in Canada and Israel, Ted Aplin is remembered for his efforts in bringing families together. He worked successfully to bring fifty orphaned children to England for adoption, and with the help of British aircrew colleagues, we spirited twelve young boys to Palestine. In fact, Ted spent all his free time at Belsen where he “felt at home”.

Returning to Canada in March, 1946, Ted Aplin lived a full and productive life with his wife Elinor and their four children. He was active in Ontario politics and was an unflagging supporter of Israel. Our friendship remained constant. It was my good fortune to spend time with him at least once a year until his death in 1973. Our families are still close. During my time with Ted, I had the privilege of meeting Mr. Josef Rosensaft, a Holocaust survivor and chairman of “The Central Committee of the Liberated Jews in the British Zone of Germany.” In an article that appears in “Holocaust and Rebirth”, published on the twentieth anniversary of the liberation of Belsen, Mr. Rosensaft writes: “Out of this evil time there come to mind events of such great humanitarian significance, that permit us to say with regard to certain institutions and individuals, that they achieved lasting fame with one single deed.” Squadron Leader Edward M. “Ted” Aplin most certainly belongs in that distinguished group.

Stan Winfield, a retired lawyer is immediate past-president of the JHS of B.C. and Yukon. In 1945 he was a sergeant in the Royal Canadian Air Force and was Ted Aplin’s aide at Celle, Germany

Rabbi Wilfred Solomon officiated at the memorial service commemorating the 50th year since the Nazi deportations of the Jews of Hungary, Romania and Carpathia. All the participants were survivors of the deportations. The Survivors Message was delivered by David Ehrlich. Sixty-five new names were unveiled on the monument.

Visit of Anna Rosmus

The VHCS very much regrets that Ms. Rosmus could not meet her obligation in Vancouver due to bad weather. She will return at a later date that will be well publicized. We would like to thank those among the 600 disappointed audience who opted to take a tax receipt for their tickets. Thank you as well to our patrons.
