If you have visited the Memorial at Schara Tzedeck Cemetery recently you will see that the repairs to the Memorial are now complete. The High Holidays Memorial Service will take place September 27th and though new names to the memorial are not unveiled until the Yom HaShoah spring service, we can add them at any time. Please call the Centre if you have names you wish to be inscribed prior to the September Memorial Service.

Dr. Rudolf Vrba Honoured

The University of Haifa has recently conferred upon local survivor Dr. Rudolf Vrba an honourary Doctorate of Philosophy. The degree was bestowed in recognition of his heroism and daring in exposing, during the war itself, the horrors of Auschwitz, which action led to the saving of Jewish lives; and in profound appreciation of his educational contribution and devotion to spreading knowledge about the Holocaust. Dr. Vrba presented the 1997 Kristallnacht Lecture.

Interpreting the Holocaust in Art: A Conversation with Artists

THURSDAY AUGUST 20, 1998 7:30PM

Marking the close of the exhibit Order & Chaos

There is a increasing number of contemporary artists creating artwork dealing with Holocaust themes and imagery. The HEC receives numerous requests each year from artists wishing to exhibit in our galleries. Some are creating this work out of a direct personal connection as survivors, members of the Second Generation or with Jewish or European backgrounds. Other artists working with this topic have a historic, moral or "universal" connection rather than an experiential one. To work with Holocaust imagery opens up some of the most vexing and complex questions of historical appropriation and representation in art. For this reason the Holocaust Education Centre is hosting an informal discussion: Art and Atrocity.

This forum will deal with some of the issues confronting artists who deal with the Holocaust. For example, Holocaust images used by artists often border on expressions of sentimentality or rely on easily identifiable images that have become emblematic of the Holocaust experience - icons such as the striped clothing, iron gates and disappearing train tracks. Many of these images have become stereotypic or even "trite," thus robbing the emotional or evocative power of the images - losing their impact in the process, and "flattening" the historical memory rather than highlighting or sharpening it. Contemporary art is often highly referential. Artists create work about how the Holocaust is represented as much as about the history and events of the Holocaust. What are the messages given off by work which is often more about cultural critique or victimization than about social action? What is the relationship of aesthetics and ideology - can or should artists do "beautiful" drawings of a crematorium? Does it further exploit unnamed victims to present their anonymous images as victims? Bring your thoughts and questions to an open discussion with this collection of artists.

Participating Artists

Pierre JP Bélanger was born in Montreal and studied Architecture in Paris, Barcelona, and at the University of Toronto. Pierre sees the need to publicly address notions of remembrance, the passages of time, and memory.

Linda Dayan Frimer has participated in exhibitions throughout North America. Linda was a facilitator for the Gesher Project: an exploration in writing and painting with local Holocaust survivors and members of the Second Generation.

Nomik Kaplan emigrated in 1940 from Lithuania and began working with the Holocaust in 1985 as a means of confronting the experiences of her immediate family during the war. Nomik has had 23 solo exhibitions internationally and currently resides in Vancouver.

Phyllis Serota is a painter living and working in Victoria, BC and has shown extensively throughout Western Canada and the United States since 1977. Often concerned with personal and collective memory, Phyllis began working with the Holocaust in 1997.

Elizabeth Shefrin was born in Ottawa but spent part of her childhood in Italy as part of the United Nations' community. She has worked for 25 years as a self taught artist, writer, workshop facilitator and community arts worker.
BUILDING OUR ARCHIVES

Preserving Holocaust Memory Through the Preservation and Use of Artifacts

The very word “archives” suggests a dark room, void of life with stacks from floor to ceiling filled with oddly numbered boxes. The room remains locked, access is limited. Once in a while someone dusts off the box and locates a specific artifact for a researcher. This description reflects the commonly held perception that artifacts lay untouched for years in an archives, stored away without use or anyone celebrating their existence. This does not describe the archives of the HEC.

Our collection of artifacts, numbering over 1300 objects are stored in gray boxes and are carefully secluded in a space where they can be kept safe and secure. They are also fully documented, catalogued, cherished, consulted and used in many ways to support our mandate of Holocaust education. They are presently becoming even more “visible” with the placement of three units of display which will bring more of our artifacts into view in the education room.

Most of the objects in our archival collection are “primary documents” and have come to our archive from our local survivor community. In the early days it was Rubin Pinsky who championed the value and importance of our archival collection.

"... sometimes only the photo or postcard is what remains of a beloved family member or friend..."

The objects often faced the same hardships and dangers of their owners - sometimes only the photo or postcard is what remains of a beloved family member or friend, the person having perished in Auschwitz or whose fate remains unknown. In this way many of our artifacts are also "survivors." In other cases such as passports, whether authentic or forged the object actually saved their life and is therefore a powerful symbol of survival in itself.

These objects have educational as well as historical value – they can serve as an important catalyst giving immediacy and authenticity – communicating a sense that these events actually happened to real people. An object when handled or viewed in its physical presence has the power to bring the student back to the historic moment, to place the life saving passport in their own hands, to assist the imagination to visualize or contextualize abstract experiences. Artifacts bring the past into the present helping to establish a physical bridge by which the survivors story can be entered.

Every program, exhibit, and Teacher’s Guide uses images or reproductions made from the artifacts in the archives. Our discovery trunks, both for the teaching of Anne Frank and the most recent trunk on immigration contain replicas of nearly 100 items from our archives. During most exhibits, a selection of material relating to the

Translation of a postcard written by Paul Meyer from Concentration Camp Dachau 3K November 1938

My Dearest! As you can see from the address, I am here in Dachau. I am in good health and I feel alright and hope the same for you. You are allowed to reply to me at once on a postcard, but must be sure to follow exactly the instructions on the reverse. You are also allowed to send money, as one can buy here everything. Maybe DM50 - but you must be sure to indicate on the postal money order my address, barrack and section number as well as my date of birth. How are you all? I am most eager to have news from you and await it anxiously. Please greet all relatives and friends most cordially from me. I am always with you in thought. A hearty kiss from Paul.
exhibit is placed in display cases. Images are used to illustrate articles in Zachor and in almost all of our publications.

Building an archival collection depends on the trust of our community, on our ability to care for and document the material and on our ability to educate our membership, survivors and their children as to the value of donation and preservation. First we need to be able to identify those things which should be saved.

"Building an archival collection depends on the trust of our community ... and our ability to educate our membership, survivors and their children as to the value of donation and preservation."

Just trying to define what constitutes a "Holocaust artifact" is a conceptual minefield. Often it is impossible to identify the significance of what may look like a casual everyday item without an intimate knowledge of the events of the Holocaust or the specific survivor's history. Holocaust-related artifacts are so embedded in personal stories that if disassociated from the narrative they lose their meaning completely and the very definition of the object as an artifact. Often children or other relatives may come across postcards or photographs without knowing their significance. It is critical that survivors sit down with someone within their families, with an archivist or staff member to tell us the meaning or story associated with each item. It is the meaning that the survivor attributes to the artifact that interests us most.

We are interested in the donation of materials to our archives - things relating to the events and conditions of the Holocaust, photographs or items that represent cherished traces of families or people who perished or survived. We also collect anti-Semitic propaganda, evidence of resistance - objects and images that reflect cultural loss and the destruction of the rich cultural and religious communities before the war. We are interested in objects of Diaspora and dislocation as a result of the turmoil in Europe or as a direct result of the Holocaust. We are interested in images and documents that deal with DP camps, post war and later immigration, or those items that reflect the loss of careers or businesses due to the Nazi policies.

Many of the artifacts that reach us are in fragile condition or are in danger of deterioration. Not all the artifacts that people bring to us can be acquisitioned and taken into the collection because they do not fall within the mandate - or would not be able to be properly stored, cared for or used educationally.

In the future it will be the oral testimonies, and these few historic artifacts that will be the only remaining "traces" - the residue of the tragic loss known as the Holocaust - that will remain.

From the Archives

At the time we began to conceptualize and research the story of the Jewish community of Shanghai there was not one single item in the HEC archives relating to the experiences of the 20,000 Jews who fled Germany and Austria for safe haven in Shanghai during the Holocaust - even though there were many families in the Vancouver area sharing this history. Within weeks a donor unconnected with our organization and unaware of the timeliness of his gesture donated a complete package of original documents relating to one Vancouver family whose journey had taken them from Vienna to Shanghai and finally to Vancouver. This material was "rescued" from a dumpster - placed there after being found wet and molding in a basement after the family home was vacated following the parents' death. After treatment to clean and preserve the documents, remaining family members were contacted. Their oral histories will form, along with this archival material, a significant section of the exhibition "Bringing Our Memories with Us - Wartime Stories of Shanghai," to be mounted in the fall of 1999.

Shortly thereafter a photo album was brought into the Centre by a member of the 2nd Generation. It was one family's photo album who had fled Europe for Shanghai - a family where the principal people in the album were no longer alive and where much of the narrative has been lost. This album has been shown to other Jewish families in the community known to have lived in Shanghai before emigrating to Canada and has proven to be an important catalyst for stimulating their oral histories. From their responses and explanations of what is pictured in the album, the story of this family and others stories have unfolded. Through the integration of oral histories and the narratives associated with our archival material the experiences of a whole community can be understood and shared.

Senator Cairene Reay Wilson: Canada’s Torch Bearer For Refugees
by Stanley H. Winfield

As Canadians, we are justifiably proud that our country has earned and deserves recognition as being one of the best, if not the best, country in the world in which to live. Regrettably, it also has the reputation of having one of the world’s worst records for refusing entry to victims of Nazi persecution. Much has been written about Canada’s attitude toward Jewish immigration during the 1930s and 1940s. The popular view is that there were no real challenges to the infamous Frederick C. Blair, the Deputy Minister of Immigration, or to Charlotte Whitton, then a prominent Ottawa social activist. Both were powerful advocates of the “none is too many” philosophy when it came to the admission of Jewish refugees, particularly during the decade preceding the war.

Throughout my reading of Canada’s rigid immigration policy, one name kept reappearing. A line or two here and there would refer to a Senator Cairene Wilson, invariably portrayed as a champion of the Jewish refugee cause. In fact, the first time I had heard of her was in a letter from home in early 1945, while I was serving overseas in the RCAF. An uncle had written to me about Senator Wilson’s personal efforts to bring Jewish war orphans, survivors of the Holocaust, to Canada. Wishing to learn more about her I searched library databases but with no success. Early this year I decided to use the facilities of the Archives of Canada to research the life of this remarkable Canadian who, on February 15, 1930, became the first woman appointed to the Senate, then elected the first President of the League of Nations Society of Canada, and in 1948, Canada’s first woman delegate to the United Nations.

Prior to 1930, immigration to Canada was virtually unrestricted and, for the most part, those who could produce proper certificates of health and good character were welcomed with open arms. However, in 1931, the law was amended by an Order-in-Council which restricted immigration to 1) first degree relatives of persons already in Canada; 2) bona fide agricultural settlers; or 3) persons possessing substantial capital. While racial prejudice undoubtedly existed at the time, it can be assumed that the motivating factor for this change in the law was primarily economic and not founded on anti-Semitism alone.

From 1933 onwards, Senator Wilson became a torch bearer for the rescue of the Jews of Europe, whom she described as “the people on Canada’s conscience.” She was tireless in her travells across the country, spending her energy presenting the plight of refugees to Canadians, urging individuals and governments to come to their aid. An editorial in the November 28, 1938, edition of The Ottawa Citizen applauded her efforts in drawing the Senate’s attention to the fact that Canada was “avoiding its responsibility as a member of the British Empire in not coming to the aid of hundreds of thousands of dispossessed people in Europe.” As early as November 1939, she urged that “an immigration council be established immediately to study the matter and permit the immigration of refugees.” The March 16, 1940, edition of The Regina Leader Post reports on a speech she gave the previous evening in which she said: “What I wish to urge is that Canada, an open and peaceful country, which needs more people, has an opportunity to show in a practical way its deep sense of the needs of suffering people. We cannot miss this opportunity.”

In 1938, after the Munich Agreement drove thousands from their homes and added more innocent victims to the great mass of Jews already enduring Nazi persecution, Senator Wilson organized and became Chairman of The Canadian National Committee on Refugees and Victims of Political Persecution. The purpose of the Committee was, inter alia, “to bring about a better understanding of the restrictions of immigration.” Sadly, this organization was utterly ineffective in moving the government to a more sympathetic attitude towards Jewish refugees. The doors remained closed.

Born in Montreal, Senator Cairene Reay Wilson died in Ottawa on March 3, 1962, at the age of seventy-seven. She was a devout Presbyterian. In an interview with The Ottawa Citizen on November 25th, 1939, she said: “We must not forget as Christians that Jesus and his family were all Jews.” Her’s was a voice in the wilderness of Canada’s dismal immigration policy. She was determined to change it – she demanded action. She repeatedly called on the Canadian government to open the doors to the Nazi’s victims, but to no avail. The grim reality was that the government of the day would never relent in its adamant refusal to change the official immigration policy, so ruthlessly enforced by the obdurate and anti-Semitic bureaucrat, Frederick Blair. However, this sad fact should not be allowed to blur Senator Cairene Wilson’s advocacy on behalf of all victims of Nazi persecution. It is important and necessary that we remember, recognize and pay homage to this extraordinary Canadian who tried so sincerely and vigorously, albeit unsuccessfully, to rescue countless innocent human being from the Holocaust.

Journey to Canada – A Discovery Kit
by Frieda Miller

The exhibit Open Hearts – Closed Doors grew out of some powerful interviews with several of the War Orphans. Their stories, photographs and documents proved to be an invaluable teaching tool for the hundreds of students who toured the exhibit. Our goal was to find a way of keeping these stories alive and in the hands of students and teachers, long after the exhibit was over.

To meet this challenge a discovery kit Journey to Canada: The War Orphans Project, 1947 - 1949 has just been developed. It explores both the unique story of the War Orphans Project as well as the more general theme of Canadian immigration policies.

The kit features a hands-on approach and makes use of documentary evidence to support student learning about the aftermath of the Holocaust. The letters, diary entries, newspaper articles, photographs, identification cards and official documents contained in the kit are supported by information cards, posters and a Teacher’s Guide. Together these materials guide student learning outward from the more personal and concrete to a larger understanding of this history and the issues.

The kit is divided into seven thematic modules. Each module is comprised of a poster, a student activity card and a small portfolio full of artifacts and information cards. The modules can be set up as stations around the classroom, used with individual students or in group work. By working sequentially through each module, students develop insight into the post-war immigration experience.

Unfortunately, the story of the Jewish war orphans was not an anomaly, but symptomatic of Canada’s ethnically selective immigration policy at that time. The intent of this kit is to challenge young people to consider Canada’s history and its responsibility towards the world’s refugees today. The kit will be officially launched at the Building Bridges Not Walls Conference in Vancouver, October 1998 and will be available for loan to the schools this fall.

THE LAST LETTER
By Serge Vanry

This letter was written by my aunt, Lisa Rosenblum (nee Kouchelevitch) on the eve of her departure from Drancy, the largest concentration camp in France, located in the suburbs of Paris. Lisa had stepped out of her apartment without her yellow star in order to make a quick purchase at a local grocery store. She was seen by a collaborator neighbour, denounced to the authorities and arrested immediately. She ended up in Drancy on October 7, 1943, and on October 28th was deported on train #61, joining 1000 helpless Jewish men, women and children on their way to a fearful destination: Auschwitz. On arrival, 284 men and 103 women were selected for forced labour, and 613 prisoners were gassed immediately after their arrival. By 1945, only 31 of the original group had survived, among them two women. Lisa, 54 at the time, was never seen again.

... Wednesday [October 27th, 1943]

My Dearests:

I have just received your letter at this very moment. I do not even have enough strength to cry anymore. Tomorrow, Thursday at 3 o'clock in the morning, we are leaving. We are a group of 1000 persons with many elderly people and small children. We do not know where we are going. Do not forget Bernard [her son, who was a prisoner of war].

My very dear Henri [husband], Paulette [daughter] and my elderly mother, I hug you all to heart and ask all of you to pray G-d for me, because I want to survive so that I may see all my children again.

I want to embrace very hard all our family members as well as all our good friends. I beseech you not to step outside, because every day more and more people arrive here [after their arrests]. I hold you all very close to my heart.

Lisa

[Uncle] Zalman [Kalmanowitz], Esther and their son are leaving as well, on the same train.

"In a few simple words, this dramatic letter expresses the foreboding, terror and tragedy experienced by millions of our people, sent mercilessly to their deaths in inhuman conditions. I believe that these simple remnants of a terrible past, force us to pause and experience the agony deeply within ourselves. We feel a sharp pain in our hearts and we experience anger. Anger at an indifferent world that could not be bothered to intervene at the time, and now seems interested in forgetting, if not erasing, the memories of our loved ones. Lisa’s voice reinforces our resolve to remember, speak to, and educate as many as possible. Her words will never be forgotten!" – Serge Vanry
"No Longer Alone"

THREE PROSE PIECES
By Marion Irene Cassirer

I CHOSE

"Choose," she said rather impatiently, "I have to complete this form to register you for school."

"Choose," I thought, "I just had my ninth birthday and I’m supposed to make a decision that will affect me the rest of my life." Actually I thought I was only eight, because I was very small and had been told again and again: "you are five, remember you are five." Fives were good, sixes were bad. As we started our escape, fives were safe; sixes had to wear the yellow star. No wonder I only remembered the day but not the age I really was. It was just one more addition to the stone necklace that was pulling my life down.

My mother had changed everything since she first appeared at the farmhouse where I was hidden barely three months ago. This old-looking woman, with the missing teeth, straggly hair, funny accent and flabby white skin. Everyone said this was really my Mother and I had to call her Mama. This perfect stranger? How could she be my mother? I had a family already.

Just the same, she took me here to Amsterdam and nothing was the same. I could not cross myself and pray on my knees in front of my bed at night. I could not go to church. I could not have milk with my dinner, I could not — I could not. I had to be Jewish, whatever that was. Praying I understood, the language I didn’t. She took me away from all I knew and loved. That me was no more —

"Well," she interrupted my musings, "which is it going to be?" The choice was easy after all. Renie was left behind, the new me would continue on.

"Marion" I said, "I am Marion."

Who and what would I be today if I had chosen Irene?

CHILDHOOD

The dangerous times, filled with fright of the uniforms around me, constantly watching, watching. Having to hide my identity, shivering with cold and hunger, never safe. What is a child without laughter and toys, yearning to learn, unable to belong. What have I done to be pursued, run down and threatened with death. Am I different just because I have black hair, and the others are so blond? When will this nightmare end? Where is pappa to explain it all? He never came back to answer my questions. How can I be a child when I have to be responsible for myself? Childhood means danger, to be lived through as quickly as possible. To be a child is to be vulnerable.

LIBERATION

I remember.

I was pumping water. From the pump outside to fill a kettle for Moeke.

I heard planes and quickly looked up. These were "good" planes. I knew the markings by now. More and more planes flew overhead when suddenly the sky was filled with large mushrooms with men dangling from them; and funny double ones with jeeps or large boxes. I started to run into the fields, but Moeke quickly ran outside and pulled me back into the house.

Soon we were surrounded by Canadian soldiers in their khaki uniforms and brown boots. They motioned to us, with smiles, imagine — SMILES, that we should go into the barn for our safety.

This was the beginning of the battle for the now-famous bridge at Arnhem. We heard the "ping" of bullets, and the "ack-ack" and booms of heavier fighting. By early evening the sky was red, orange, purple and black from all the smoke of battle.

Our fields were empty now of soldiers and parachutes. Parachutes were everywhere, covering the ground like a patchwork quilt even in the trees. Those wonderful parachutes; soon to become skirts and dresses, ribbons for my hair, curtains and drapes, tablecloths and bedcovers and so much more.

Vader explained to us all that now we were free. Moeke went out to her "Resistance" garden. A tiny patch not filled with potatoes or sugarbeets, but with flowers. Only ORANGE flowers. I saw her hold her hands in prayer and look up into the red sky, her lips moving. Then she bent down and picked ALL her orange flowers and brought them inside the house.

Board Welcomes New President and Pays Tribute to Outgoing President Dr. Robert Krell

The VHCS honors Dr. Robert Krell, a master builder, whose vision of a better world shaped a lasting legacy for future generations.

Over 200 people attended a special tribute dinner held at the Richmond Country Club on May 16th to honour HEC founder Dr. Robert Krell for his many years of service to the VHCS. The community and members of the VHCS expressed their sincere appreciation, warmth and respect for the many years of service that Rob has given to the Society. Rob served as President of the Board from 1985 until June of 1998.

Rob Krell began his long and committed involvement in Holocaust education in the early 70's - initially through his work with Canadian Jewish Congress. In 1975, with Dr. Graham Forst, he founded the Annual High School Symposium on the Holocaust. Rob has been instrumental in establishing the audio-visual survivor testimony project, and in establishing the Child Survivor and Second Generation groups. Rob has published many scholarly articles and a full length book dealing with the psychological effects of the Holocaust on survivors and their children.

Life Fellows to the VHCS Awarded at AGM

At the Annual General Meeting in June three new highly deserving life fellows were named - Rita Akselrod, Dr. William Nicholls, and Robbie Waisman. The awarding of a life fellowship is given in recognition of special contributions in the area of Holocaust remembrance and education.

William Nicholls was one of the early founders of the Annual Holocaust Symposium in 1976 as well as one of its first featured speakers. He has been an activist, a defender of Israel, worked to free Jonathan Pollard, and been a fighter against anti-Semitism and Holocaust denial. Dr. Nicholls, retired professor of the Department of Religious Studies at UBC authored the scholarly study “Christian Anti-Semitism - A History of Hate” published in 1993. The inscription in that book reflects Bill's commitment: "To the survivors of the Holocaust, and in particular to those who have undertaken the task of bearing witness to a new generation."

Robbie Waisman was born in Skarczysko, Poland. He suffered terrible losses throughout the war. After his liberation at Buchenwald he was taken to Ecouis in France with about 480 other youngsters. Robbie arrived in Canada in 1949 as one of the Canadian Jewish Congress war orphans and went on to become an accountant, family man, and community leader in both Calgary and Saskatoon. Fortunately for our organization he moved to Vancouver in 1977 where he quickly joined in the work of the VHCS with great dedication. Robbie has been Treasurer and Vice President of the Society and now will serve as the President of the VHCS. Robbie is also an outstanding survivor speaker and teacher.

Rita Akselrod was born in Romania. As a child she wore the yellow star during the German occupation. She was fortunate to survive with her immediate family intact. They fled Romania via Hungary and Austria. She was married in 1948 to Ben Akselrod and they came to Canada in 1951. Throughout her life Rita has overcome adversity with activism. Her daughter’s tragic death led to her founding Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD). Her war memories and her husband’s experiences led to her dedication to Holocaust education. She has served as Director of the Outreach Program and as Vice President of the Society with great distinction. Last year she received the YWCA Woman of Distinction award for her work with the Louis Brier Home and Hospital, and the Vancouver Holocaust Centre Society. She brought us great honour and now we honour her with a Life Fellowship.
